JAMESTOWN FESTIVAL PRAISED BY STANLEY

Williamsburg, Va.- The State of Virginia has developed a major new economy based upon the accumulation of its visitors, Governor Thomas B. Stanley said here Sunday morning at the dedication ceremonies of Colonial Williamsburg's Information Center and associated Motor House and Cafeteria facilities.

"It is an economy which is becoming more and more important to Virginia, opening up, as it does, opportunities for many of our people," Governor Stanley continued.

Principal speaker at the dedication of Colonial Williamsburg's $10,000,000 worth of new visitor facilities, the Governor praised the organization which has restored this 18th-century city for its great inspiration in the "reawakening of interest in the entire period of early American history."

"Thirty years ago — when the Restoration began — it was quite the fashion to ignore, or at least to be unaware of American historical figures," Governor Stanley pointed. "This year, it is estimated that over six million people from all over the country will visit Virginia and most will have the historical heritage of America in mind."
